Research into Roma, Gypsy and Traveller artefacts and records held in the UK

Roma Routes is an EU funded project working across five countries in Europe, Greece, Germany, Slovenia, Romania and the UK. Members of the Romany community are working with museums and heritage organisations to put their culture on the map, and to find ways of telling non-Romany people about their way of life.

As part of this EU funded project we have aimed to gain a picture of the UK archives and museum collections which have items relating to the Gypsy, Roma and Traveller community. The information in this document was sent to us by each museum and archive.

For more information on the Roma Routes project please visit Exploring Surreys Past website.

British Library Oral History
www.bl.uk/oralhistory

British Library Oral History holdings contain a number of items concerning the experiences of individuals, or issues related to the community - often raised by non-members - in discussions, interviews or broadcasts. Many of these appear in Collection number C900 'Millennium Memory Bank' (Recordings derived from the joint BBC/British Library project, The Century Speaks: Millennium Oral History Project.) but there is a wide variety of collections which have some relevant items. These may be found via the online catalogue at www.cadensa.bl.uk
- Oral History Collection number C1106 'Irish Women Travellers' (Life story interviews with women from the Irish Traveller community. The recordings are part of an oral history research project which explores the health of these women across generations and across the life span - a project undertaken by Sue Beck as research for an MSc in Public Health and Health Promotion at South Bank University.) 5 interviews on 15 tapes

General Collection Description:
- Model Romany caravan or vardo x 1
- Model Romany caravan, or vardo x 2 Two models of Romany caravans, known as a Vardo. A vardo is a traditional horse-drawn wagon which functions as both a home and form of transport. This style of vardo is known as the 'Reading'. The model, like a full-size vardo, has been richly decorated with hand carving, here with flowers and paintings of grapes on the vine. It was made by Patrick Doran while he was in prison. Doran was an Irish Traveller whose family camped in Hackney from time to time.

Results of project to collect family heritage of local Gypsies and

With the support of the Culture Programme of the Travellers in Leicestershire including exhibition panels, online exhibition and online photo gallery and several disks of digitized photos dating from late 19th century to late 20th century and oral histories.

This material was collected as part of a project funded by Renaissance East Midlands in association with the National Archives ‘Moving Here’ project between 2007 and 2008. Working with local Gypsy and Traveller Families, the Record Office for Leicestershire, Leicester and Rutland and Leicester City Museums Service collected a range of photographic material from local people – this was digitized and forms a very important collection within the Record office. There are also a number of oral history interviews with local Gypsy families as part of the collection. From this material an exhibition called ‘Stopping Places’ was created, and appears online on the Record Office’s website.

All though there is no collection as such we are aware, however, through hearsay, that in the 17th, 18th and first half of the 19th centuries, many miners and quarrymen used 'The Tramping System' to find work here in Coniston's coppermines and slate quarries, and/or to move on to more productive mines and quarries. There were definite connections with Cornwall, possibly as far back as the Bronze Age - but these links were definitely encouraged, between c.1820 and 1860 by the Cornish entrepreneur John Taylor, who seems to have invested in mines and quarries throughout the UK, including Grassington, North Yorkshire; Coniston; and the rich haematite mines of Low Furness, which turned Barrow into a major ship-building centre [for steel ships]. Cornish and Irish patronyms are still common in Low Furness.

There are also ambitions to develop a museum collection in Appleby to treat the history of Appleby Horse Fair, and the horse copers who have always frequented it.

- Oil painting, entitled Head of a Spanish Gypsy, by Augustus Edwin John [1973.3]. A post-impressionist portrait of a Spanish Gypsy woman, a three-quarter left side head and shoulders view. She has thick, long dark hair plaits down her back, with eyes downcast. The style of painting is dynamic with daubs of paint used, this captures the movement or at least something instant about the sitter. In this portrait the woman has deep, black hair with an olive complexion, red lips and a simple green top. The background is pale blue.

- Oil painting, entitled Vivien, by Frederick Sandys, 1863 [1925.70]. Head and shoulders of a young woman, in profile facing to the left, her hands resting on an ornate green and white tiled parapet. Her white, fleshy throat forms the centre of the composition. She wears a luxurious gilt embroidered shawl with an interlocking geometric pattern and an edging of tiny pearls, and a string of heavy red beads, possibly carnelian, around her neck, with matching red earrings. Her thick dark wavy hair flows down her back. She holds a sprig of poisonous flowering daphne in her left hand, which she rests on her other hand, which is palm down on the parapet. An apple and a red poppy lie on the ledge in front of her, with some fallen leaves and petals from the sprig in her hand. She is set against a backdrop of radiating peacock feathers. The model was Sandys’ Gypsy lover Keomi. She is portrayed as Vivien, the sensual enchantress who seduced Merlin in Alfred Lord Tennyson’s poetic work Idylls of the King (1859). Sandys painted and drew Keomi many times, but Vivien is the only work by him in Manchester City Galleries’ collection.

- Oil painting, entitled Gipsy Camp, Sunrise, by Henry Clarence Whaite (1828-1912), [1979.611]. A rural landscape with tall trees to the right, through which shafts of dawn sunlight fall across a gipsy camp to the left. Two female figures are in the foreground to the left, one standing with a bundle of wood, the other kneeling to gather water in a bucket from a stream running across the foreground. The hazy dawn light obscures the rest of scene.

- Acc. 11238/70 – Literary papers Agnes Miller, XXI Welsh Gypsy Folk Tales, 1933.
- Acc. 12091 – The Sir Angus Fraser Collection of George Borrow material Including his working papers on Borrow. Sir Angus Fraser (1928-2001) was a senior British civil servant, and a passionate book collector. His preeminent collecting interest was the Victorian author George Borrow (1803-1881), and his will instructed his executors to offer his Borrow Collection to a suitable British library. The National Library of Scotland was approached and was delighted to accept the bequest of books and manuscripts. His collection of books on Gypsies was given to Leeds University Library, and other printed material was sold (see Graham York Rare Books catalogue 56, 2005).
